BUGS BUNNY'S Thanksgiving

It was the Tuesday before Thanksgiving and Bugs Bunny strolled gaily down the street in the crisp November sunshine. He stopped when he saw Porky Pig and Petunia, huddled on the steps of Petunia's house, writing briskly on pads of paper.

"Whatcha doin', pals?" Bugs called.

Petunia looked up from the pad, balanced on her knee. "We're writing our lists of things we're thankful for," she explained. "Teacher told us to bring them to school tomorrow, you know!"

"H-Have you w-written your l-list, Bugs?" Porky inquired.

"No!" Bugs answered with a jeering laugh. "I ain't goin' to make any list, 'cause I ain't thankful for anything!"

"Why, Bugs Bunny, you ought to be ashamed!" Petunia scolded. "You've got dozens of things to be thankful for!"

"I can't figger out even one!" Bugs grinned and strolled away.

Bugs's stroll turned into a swift lope as he hurried toward the outskirts of town. His lope changed to a cautious and stealthy walk, as he drew near to Farmer Hare's barnyard. When he reached the fence, he peered from left to right warily.

The barnyard was deserted and there was no movement behind the windows of the little house. Farmer Hare's truck was gone.

"The coast's clear!" Bugs muttered to himself and hopped merrily across the barnyard to a pair of heavy wooden doors, set in the ground. "Now I can get a good load of carrots before Farmer Hare comes back."

The wooden doors were fastened with a simple snap lock. They led down into Farmer Hare's vegetable cellar. Bugs had discovered this treasure room two weeks before, and he had been enjoying Farmer Hare's luscious carrots whenever Farmer Hare was not at home.

Quickly Bugs turned the lock, flung back one of the heavy wooden doors and scrambled down the ladder into the cellar. Eagerly he pawed through the burlap sacks which filled the room, searching for carrots.

Suddenly a gust of November wind caught the open door and slammed it shut, plunging Bugs into midnight darkness!

The startled Bugs dropped the sack with a yell and groped for the ladder. Maybe the lock had not snapped! He found the ladder and stumbled up until his hands touched the heavy closed doors. He pushed and shoved with all his strength. But he couldn't budge those wooden doors one inch. The lock had snapped! Bugs was trapped in the cold dungeon of the vegetable cellar!

In his first terror he yelled and shouted and pounded on the locked doors. Then he remembered that no one was at home. He'd have to wait until Farmer Hare returned and released him. But, in the meantime, he might as well be eating carrots.

He fumbled in the dark and opened a sack. It was filled with potatoes! All the sacks were filled with potatoes! There were no carrots anywhere!

The next hour was a nightmare. The cellar grew colder and colder. Bugs could not stay warm even by huddling between the potato sacks. The dirt floor was damp and icy, so he crouched miserably on a rung of the ladder. A terrifying thought made him shiver. Suppose he had to stay in this cold blackness forever, freezing and hungry and scared!

Then he thought of the crisp yellow sunshine outside the cellar. Of the cozy warmth of his own little house. Of the gay companionship of Porky and Petunia and Elmer Fudd and all his friends. Of the delicious Thanksgiving dinner to which Petunia had invited him. Of all the fun he had every day. He even thought fondly of Teacher, who really was kind and forgiving.

When he heard the truck roar into the yard, he leaped up the steps and pounded on the wooden doors.

"Help! Help! Let me out of here!"

After awhile, the lock clicked, the doors opened and Bugs rushed up into the sun light, to face the scowling Farmer Hare.

"So you're the rascal who's been stealing my carrots!" Farmer Hare cried. "I put 'em in the barn, figurin' I'd catch you huntin' for 'em! I ought to have you arrested."

"Please don't do that, Doc!" Bugs pleaded. "I've been shut in that awful cellar for hours! I've learned my lesson! I'll never steal another carrot! Honest, I won't!"

Finally Farmer Hare's scowl disappeared. "I guess you have learned a lesson," he said, looking at the repenting Bugs. "I'll let you go today! But next time . . ."

"There won't be a next time," Bugs promised and scuttled away.

Porky and Petunia were in the house, sitting before the fire, when Bugs dashed breathlessly into the room.

"Where's them pads and pencils you had?" he asked quickly. "I wanta make out my list o' things I'm thankful for!"

"Why, Bugs!" Petunia exclaimed in surprise. "I thought you said you weren't thankful for anything!"

"I've changed my mind!" Bugs grinned. "Now I'm thankful for just about EVERYTHING!"
